WANT CITY'S MONEY.

Many Suits for Damages Now Pending

BIG MONEY ASKED IN MOST CASES

Seven Actions for Damages for Personal Injuries, Several Sewer Suits and Two High School Building Cases—Some of Them Old Timers.

There is a large number of suits pending against the city, and this morning when City Attorney John C R Taylor called upon the new city attorney John I Wright to congratulate him upon his succession he told him that all city papers in his possession were ready to be turned over to him An Argus reporter took the list over and in connection with the suits will be of more or less interest to the taxpayers

There is a number of suits in which the city has been served with papers and that has not yet been heard of from them They are however on the list and late took several years Among those now in various stages of progress are the following

Dr Thomas S Gibson has a disputed claim of $500 against the city for services rendered in connection with the Wawayanda sewer matter

John Cummings has brought a suit to restrain the city from using the Fulton street sewer because it has backed up and long hanging in the cellar of his store at the corner of Jay avenue

County Supt of the Poor Charles B Wood seeks the aid of the courts to have taxes on the Orchard street ground that his property on Dickey mountain was purchased with pension money

Hiram W Purdy of Academy street wants damages in several amounts for alleged injuries to property caused by the backing up of sewers

Mary V Hobby of Brooklyn sheet attorney has a suit brought for $25 000 damages

Emily H Mills administratrix of Amelia Pond has a suit for alleged negligence resulting in a fall

Catherine E Pine Pine Street sidewalk and she also has a suit It was commenced in 1898

The A A Griffing Iron Company sues the treasurer of the city for the payment of an account growing out of the construction of the High School

Martin Lee Hill on the west side Mulberry street in front of the store property owned by Jesse W Canfield and the Knights of Columbus Hall is the plaintiff in a suit for $5 000

Thomas Watts has a suit for $1 000 against the city claiming that that amount of damage has been done to his Fulton street property by the backing up of the sewer

Mary E Hall of the west side at Wickham avenue and Cottage street and she seeks $5 000 damages for alleged injuries

Wm Mallard was working in the sewer trench near the Wankill Hat Works three weeks ago and received an injuries He sues the city for $12 000

Edward M Williams sues the city for became alleged trouble on his contract while laying the High School

Mrs Centia Parton sues for $5 000 for alleged injuries received on Sunday night when she stumbled over a water box on the west end of Main West Main

The total amount of money asked for in the suits would have the property which is the instruction of the city to be called by the suits know that the suits will be settled by arbitration and to compromise put up for less than the face of the claim

HYMENEAL

Correspondence of Argus and Mercury

For several weeks past the society of Mount Salem and vicinity has been all agog over the proposed marriage of Charles L Casterlin son of the late George C Casterlin, and Miss Elizabeth eldest daughter of John T Hoyt

The wedding which was a very quiet one occurred, March 8, 1899, at 7 o'clock at the old Hoyt homestead about a mile west of the village The ceremony was performed by the Rev S E Edwards, pastor of the Baptist church and was witnessed only by the immediate relatives of the contracting parties All nature seemed to smile on this happy union for a more perfect day in winter is seldom experienced in this equinoctial climate of ours

The bride was very becomingly attired in a gown of pale blue poplin trimmed with white satin and lace and presented a beautiful appearance The groom who is one of our most estimable young men, wore the conventional black dress suit

After congratulations the bridal party was invited to the dining room, where a sumptuous wedding supper was served no pains being spared to made the occasion one of enjoyment

Mr and Mrs Casterlin were very generously remembered by their many friends the presents being numerous and valuable A feature of the wedding was the date on which it was celebrated, which was the sixth anniversary of the wedding of the groom's sister Mrs Sidney Westfall who resides at Auburn N Y

We understand that the newly wedded pair intend to begin housekeeping at once and will be at home to their friends at Rockport, N J after April 1

Fire which broke out in Silas Martine's wagon making shop at Westtown at 8 o'clock Wednesday night, destroyed it, Terwilliger's blacksmith shop and a barn

Silas Martine the well known wagon maker of Westtown was in this city, Wednesday and he returned at 6 o'clock. He lives about over his shop, and after starting a wood fire he went out to do some shopping There was a glass blowers entertainment at the hotel, and a goodly part of the village population was there when the fact that the shop was on fire was discovered Every effort was made to prevent the spread of the flames but without avail

The blacksmith shop occupied by Oscar Terwilliger, caught fire and was totally destroyed though Mr Terwilliger managed to save all of his tools

Mr Martine's shop was burning so fiercely when the blaze was discovered that it was impossible to save anything, and he lost his set of tools and his horse fell a victim The fire is supposed to have started from a stove in the finishing apartment

The fire extended to James Cudney's barn and it too was totally destroyed, Mr Cudney's horse being saved with difficulty Several wagons and sleighs were pulled out in time to prevent their burning

All of the buildings destroyed were owned by John B Halsey, and it is understood that they were insured sufficiently to cover the loss

OGDENSBURG, N. Y., March 9—A terrific explosion startled this city Tuesday night. A man named Miller of Utica, an operator of a steam shovel, occupied a cottage on the island and cares for large quantities of dynamite and powder cartridges. Tuesday night the building caught fire and reached the cartridges. An explosion followed, blowing the building to atoms. Miller and his wife fled to the opposite side of the island and escaped injury. The force of the explosion shook buildings in Ogdensburg, giving the impression of a heavy earthquake.

Twice Saved

MISS DORIS and her groom cantered together across the downs that swept in broad folds of many-tinted greens toward the sea, flashing and sparkling in golden sun gleams on the horizon.

She, the 17-year-old only child of parents married late in life, elderly now, with settled ways and habits according ill with the latter day intrusion of restless youth—this growing up of the daughter they doubtless loved but little apprehended.

Fair she was and sweet, happy in her recent emancipation from school restraints and trammels, content with life, unaware as yet of her lack of parental comprehension and control, her youthful mind attuned to all maiden fancies in the modern garb of "universal brotherhood," equality, the leveling of class distinctions as preached by her best loved schoolmate, the daughter of an ardent, well-known socialist leader.

He who rode beside her at her own request, a few years older only, good-looking, manly, with that air of clear-cut cleanliness common to grooms in general, not so very long ago the pride of his schoolmaster, captain of the village cricket club, refined, too, for his class in speech and manners, steady and sober in stables and kitchen, as his fellow servants could have said.

In very truth were there not the elements of romance in the air? Youth, beauty, innocence, with the scent of spring, the fanning of the soft west wind in the sunshine.

After awhile the girl drew rein, her companion doing likewise, keeping his horse a little back as though meaning to fall into his proper place behind her. But Miss Doris would have none of it; she wished to talk, and talk she would when she so chose. Many a time it happened of late during their morning rides.

At first the groom had responded shyly in monosyllables. "Yes, miss," "No, miss" as the case required, in a manner little satisfactory to enthusiastic maiden attempts at surmounting class barriers, but Miss Doris had the courage of conviction—a little patience and matters mended themselves.

A "social evening" in the parish schoolroom, including, among other items, a would-be tragic reading, turned into hopeless comedy by the accident of forgetfulness on the reciter's part, gave occasion. The groom bashfully described a similar incident as happening at a like entertainment in his own village home across the county, and the ice was broken, the free masonry of a common joke established between this girl and her little more than boy servant.

She had read much after a fashion, and would talk of many things with the light, facile readiness of clever, immature womanhood. He could claim acquaintance with but few authors comparatively, but he could listen with flattering deference and intelligence, while she was quick to recognize his genuine good sense and mental grasp of any subject he would lecture an opinion on though it might be expressed in language a little less elegant than hers.

So days and weeks went on, and little reckoned Miss Doris of any harm she might be doing herself or him. Yet to the groom's credit be it said never once did he "presume"—to use an old-time word she doubtless would have scouted—on his young mistress' kindness. Still did it need a distinct request on her part to bring him to her side as now to-day.

A word or two did she speak—the beauty of the sky, the sparkle of the sea, then a question—but he read a look she had told him of?

"Yes," was his answer half of it and that half he did not like at all. No argument, eager and animated by on the lady's part, ensued, the groom sticking quietly and respectfully to his point, while his mistress (irritated per haps, by the fidgetting of her mare which could not brook contradiction on the matter of) wished for going, responded sharply conscious of her own weakness and was rapidly losing her temper, when—what happened exactly was never quite clear to either.

Whether or not the mare stumbled or put her foot in a hole unnoticed by her absorbed rider—anyhow, she plunged forward, recovered herself and reared, then with a snort of mingled fright and indignation, dashed away off, crashing from her mistress' careless hands the loosely held rein, to flop upon her own neck, bringing herself there in a mad frenzy of alarm. For one second of horror groom and horse alike stood petrified and thunderstruck, then in wild pursuit the two started for mid crown as yet, the girl still sat, the stirrup hanging loose, her body crouching low along the creatures back, her hands gripping with convulsive clutch at her mane. Straight as an arrow went the maddened animal—straight to death for both, it seemed.

A half mile space and more the downcrest ran in low and gentle dwellings, to end abruptly at the edge of a cutting deep and dangerous, whose barren fence of broken bars would scarcely stay such terror stricken strides. No help was there about. Far out at sea a boat with big white sail danced on the waves as though in mockery, away in a down hollow a little red flag waved, the golf players threw aside their clubs and ran a hopeless race.

Still horse and groom rode on, he with blanched cheeks, his eyes of fire, the horse with long swinging strides, as though he guessed his goal—and at last they gained—they gained inch by inch, yard by yard, the distance lessened.

To the girl half fainting now, came a shout musical with the sound of thundering hoofs. A voice she heard and heeded cried: "Sit up—let go your hold!"

Neck by neck ran horse and mare, a pull, a sudden swerve, and the strong arms were round Miss Doris, dragging her from the saddle!

Well for her now were her youth and lightness—the freedom of her foot!

One breathless maddening moment, then dismounting from his panting horse, the groom laid his burden safe and sound, though for the moment fainting, gently on the turf, and turned to see the mare rise at the fence so close now, and go over into the abyss beyond!

"Here's a telegram just come for you, and Miss Doris says will you go up directly and see her; she's in the little sitting-room." So said one of the maids to the groom going on with his usual work in the stables now that the first excitement and talk had worn themselves out.

Subtle flattery was in the girl's glance and tone, but this, her first chance of hero worship, maybe availed her nothing.

Its object hastily tore open the telegram; read it, crushed it into his pocket, then made straight for the door into the house, and went on toward the little room she had spoken of.

DYSPEPSIA CURE

Miss Doris alone therein, flushed and fair, with shining eyes, rose to receive him, coming forward with outstretched hands.

"How can I ever thank you?" she said, and her voice was low and thrilling. "You—you saved my life, and I—what can I do for you in return? Surely there is something? You need only ask."

Her eyes fell, her cheeks paled a little, her hands taken by him perforce for one moment, but only to be dropped the next like live coals clasped themselves nervously together.

What would he ask? A kiss of her lips perhaps, or—her foolish girl's heart beat with great throbs—if maybe he dared more, spoke of love, would she? could she?

He, too, twisted his hands, cleared his throat, then spoke at last.

"Well, miss, if you would be so good, really, you could do me a very great kindness this very day. You see, I'm married, but we've kept it dark, my wife and me, because she was in a shop and didn't want to lose her place if possible, but now," here the groom grew very red and pulled the crushed telegram out of his pocket, "but now—well, miss, there's a baby, she's with my mother and they're doing well, she and the little one, but it's 20 miles away and she will be wishing to see me, I know. If you would speak to Sir John for me, maybe he'd let me have a few days' holiday just to go and see her."—Chicago Times-Herald.
